Origins of Secularism: "a crucifix on a wall is an essentially passive symbol"

- "Looking beyond appearances it is possible to discern a thread linking the Christian revolution of two thousand years ago to the affirmation in Europe of the right to liberty of the person and to the key elements of the enlightenment... namely, the liberty and freedom of every person, the declarations of the rights of man and the ultimate secular state... It can therefore be contended that in the present day social reality the crucifix should be regarded not only as a symbol of a historical and cultural development and therefore of the identity of our people, but also as a symbol of a value system: liberty, equality human dignity and religious toleration and accordingly also of the secular nature of the state."
